Activities in an Anxiety Free Environment

As a student, whether child or adult, you will learn to develop a non-resistance approach with horses to encourage a curiosity and willingness that ultimately leads to gentle, caring animals that are a pleasure to be around and ride through hands-on care, handling, riding, training and more.

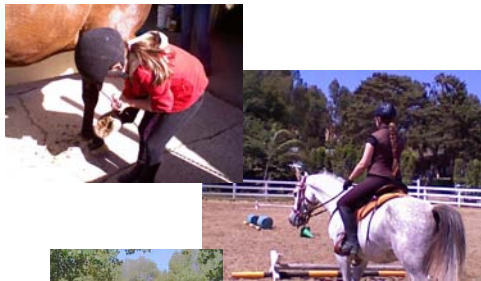

You will learn how horses think and react and how to operate safely around them.

Students will learn how to be supportive and how to look for positive changes in fellow students in a positive learning environment with a unique and fun motivational reward system.

Our developmental program can accommodate a variety of levels of experience which allows beginners and intermediates to work and grow together within the same sessions.

You will learn how horses think and react and how to operate safely around them.

Marcia Nelson

I have been interested in horses since I was old enough to run to the window to watch the horses go by when hearing that proverbial clip clop of feet! I got started at 4 yrs old and have been horse crazy ever since. My passion in working with children & adults is to invite all to understand this amazing animal; the horse. They are not a dog, they are not a cat, they are a horse and they are unique. They have been labeled as bratty, uncooperative, dangerous and difficult and I have learned in my horse training business that these things are misnomers. The horse is the most amazingly cooperative and willing animal I have found IF they understand the requests. They read body language whether we know it or not and we continually give conflicting messages to them and expect them to understand. They get frustrated and sometimes angry when these things happen. It can change and it is my mission in life to educate and help others to see this and to learn how to help this kind of relationship to develop. It is for the good of the horse and ultimately that becomes for the good of the human be you child or adult.

Applications

You will learn lifelong skills of how to do critical thinking and the how-to of problem solving thinking. We encourage you in a positive environment. Each student works at their own appropriate level. As you progress you will test your knowledge and skills by teaching them to another. This has proven to be a positive and successful way of solidifying the skills that you learn.
